Geography is the study of how things are located and arranged on Earth's surface. This includes the distribution of people, animals, plants, rocks, water, and other natural objects.

The location of different things is based on three kinds of patterns: points, lines, and areas. These patterns can be seen when you look at maps.

In Australia, geographers have studied the location and arrangement of mountains, rivers, sand dunes, lakes, glaciers, and other natural features. They have also studied how the climatic conditions vary from place to place.

Geography has become more specialized in recent decades, with specialists focusing on particular topics. For example, there are agricultural geographers, climatologists, and specialists in arid zones.
